TRUSTED FOR 150 YEARS

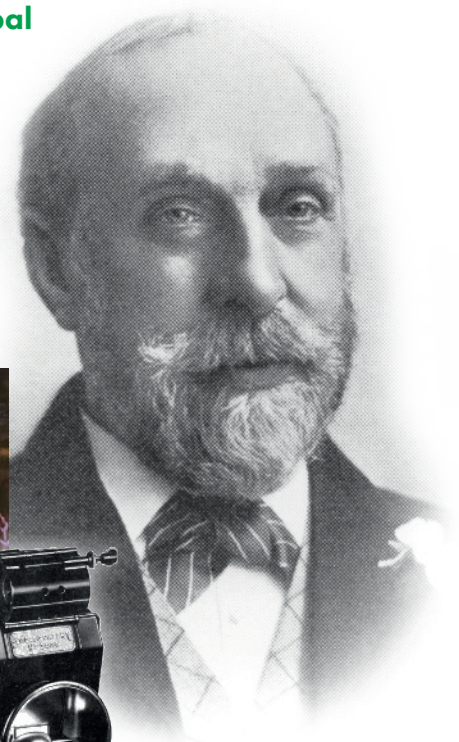

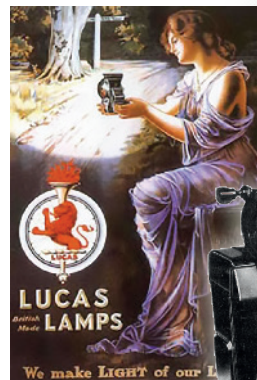

Long before the Ford Model T, even before the first Mercedes 'horseless carriage', there was Lucas. Our business was established in 1875, three years after the petrol engine was first patented. From its Birmingham beginnings under Joseph Lucas to the golden age of British motoring and today's global aftermarket, the Lucas story is one of the most iconic and enduring successes in automotive history.

We are driven by engineering excellence and a spirit of innovation. Through extensive range development, ever adapting to the changes in automotive technology, we maximise coverage to bring those innovations to you. Giving you flexible and quality solutions that take you further and keep you equipped for the future. That's why installers keep the famous Lucas green boxes close at hand in their workshops.

Our Vision

Since our story began, our aim has been to take you further, whether that's through new innovations or simply by expanding our range and coverage to help you achieve more through faster, more efficient repairs. Our reputation is built on an extensive range, exceptional durability, and outstanding quality.

TRUSTED FOR 150 YEARS

Long before the Ford Model T, even before the first Mercedes 'horseless carriage', there was Lucas. Our business was established in 1875, three years after the petrol engine was first patented. From its Birmingham beginnings under Joseph Lucas to the golden age of British motoring and today's global aftermarket, the Lucas story is one of the most iconic and enduring successes in automotive history.

1860s

Joseph Lucas (1834–1902) began in the early 1860s as a dealer in paraffin oil for domestic lamps and soon saw potential to expand into the transport market.

1870s

Lucas produced the first "King of the Road" hub lamp, for use on the Penny Farthing. Made in 1878, alongside the "Tom Bowling" ship lamp, in a small workshop on Great King Street with five employees.

1880s

An official patent was obtained in 1880 for the "King of the Road" bicycle lamp. In 1882, Joseph formed a private partnership with his son, Harry, trading under the title of Joseph Lucas & Son.

Very soon Lucas began producing carbide/acetylene lamps for motor-cars. Acetylene gas lamps produce and burn acetylene (C_2H_2) created by the reaction of calcium carbide (CaC_2) with water. They were more resistant to weather than oil lamps.

The "King of the Road" Lion became a trademark in 1884 and remained a major feature of Lucas advertising for the next 80 years.

1900s

Joseph Lucas died in 1902 to be succeeded by his son, Harry, as Chairman. Harry was able to take full advantage of the automotive boom and began producing oil lamps for motor-cars such as the oil side lamps shown here. The advertising of the time boasted the products "excellent results" that were "not affected by high winds."

1910s

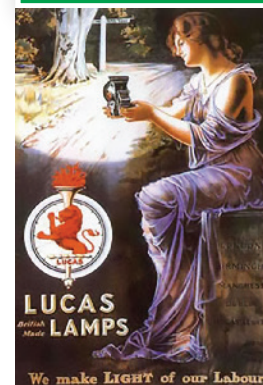

Lucas continued to grow and grow. The acquisition of Thomson-Bennett Ltd. provided in-house magneto production and firmly established its electrical credentials. Lucas added starters and dynamos soon after, revolutionising night driving.

Lucas continued to produce vehicle lighting in many forms including the P80DB and P100DB high-powered projector lamps shown here. These models used 12 Volt 60 Watt special diffused short coil axial filament bulb (as shown here) and a supplementary transverse filament bulb to allow for a dipped beam when required.

1920s & 1930s

This period saw further rapid expansion as Lucas grew alongside motor car production, becoming the largest supplier of electrical equipment to the vast majority of British vehicles and the largest manufacturer of accessories. This period saw Lucas establish many of the key product lines – not only electrical but beyond – that still operate today.

2020s

In 2025, Lucas celebrated its 150th anniversary on a truly global scale. The 'Every Box Tells A Story' campaign carried the celebration worldwide, showcasing our iconic green box in cities across the globe. Each filled with cars embarking on their journeys, equipped with Lucas parts built for long life, durability, and uncompromising quality.

2000s

Lucas entered the new millennium as a trusted supplier of premium automotive products for OEMs & the aftermarket. TRW's shift to a brand licensing model empowered specialist licensees worldwide to champion Lucas across specific aftermarket categories and regions.

2010s

The Icon campaign was born, paying tribute to the trust behind the brand and the green box that's become a global symbol of quality - showing them towering into the skylines of France and the UK, two of our key markets.

1980s

While the UK car manufacturing base declined in the 1980s, Lucas remained strong by restructuring and refocusing into overseas markets. The renamed Lucas Automotive moved into the production of high-technology engine management and braking systems.

The group was renamed as Lucas Industries in 1974 and, as part of a new corporate identity, the Lucas diagonal was introduced, a brand icon now familiar throughout the world.

1960s & 1970s

This era saw Lucas pioneering the production of sealed-beam headlights in the UK for many British car manufacturers like BMC as well as prestige marques like Bentley, Rolls-Royce, Jaguar, and Aston Martin. As Lucas manufacturing spread through Europe, Lucas Service became a global enterprise, exporting to over 130 markets with around 4,000 authorised outlets. By the end of 1975, 35% of all cars manufactured globally were fitted with braking systems produced by Lucas Girling, its affiliates, or licensees.

Little changed in the world lighting for several decades and almost all vehicles used halogen light bulbs in one form for headlights. That was until 1991 when the BMW 7 Series was introduced as the first car to use HID (also known as Xenon) headlight bulbs.

1990s

The creation of Lucas Varsity in 1996 resulted in the formation of one of the top ten automotive component suppliers in the world. This was followed by acquisition by TRW in 1999. TRW remains the global leader in automotive safety systems today.

1940s

In 1943, the Girling brake business was acquired from the New Hudson company, adding hydraulic braking to the company's product portfolio. With a multi-award-winning history in F1, Girling is still a thriving brand today.

In 1971, the H4 bulb was introduced in Europe. It was the world's first halogen headlamp bulb that could produce both low and high beam from a single bulb. The Lucas H4 bulb remains one of the most popular bulbs in the range today.

1950s

In 1951 the company was renamed Joseph Lucas (Industries) Limited, now a holding company, with eight manufacturing groups in the UK and more than 12 distribution companies operating overseas. Product milestones included the first disc brake fitted to a production car and the introduction of the DPA rotary fuel injection pump.

For the new post war cars, Lucas designed and produced flush fitting round headlamps. The first car to use the new design was the 1949/50 'raised headlamp' Morris Minor. It was simply known as the "7 inch Headlamp" and consisted of a lens/reflector unit with a replaceable British Pre-Focus (BPF) tungsten double filament bulb similar to the LLB185.
